Hail, victors, living, with laurelled brow,
And you that sleep beneath the sward
Your song was poured from cannon throats,
It rang in deep-tongued bugle-notes.
Your triumph came; you won your crown.
The grandeur of a world's renown.
Rut, in our laier lays.
Full freighted with your praise,
Fair memory harbors those whose lives, laid downing gallant faith and generous heat,
Galned only sharp defeat.
All are at peace, who once so fiercely warred
Brother and brother, now, we chant a common chord.

For, if we say God wills,
Shall we then filly deny Him,
Care of each hast in the fight?
His thunder was here in the hills
When the guns were loud in July;
And the flash of the muslerry's light
Was sped by a ray from God's eye,
In its good and its evil the scheme
Was framed with emulpotent hand,
Though the battle of men was a dream
That they could but half understand.
Can the purpose of God pass by him?
Nay; it was sure, and was wrought
Under instrutable powers.
Bravely the two armies foucht

and left the land, that was greater than they, still theirs and ours!

thens and one

Dear are the dead we weep for:

Dear are the strong hearts broken!

Proudly their memory we keep for

Our help and hepe; a telem

Of sacred thought too deep for

Words that leave it unspoken

All that we know of fairest.

All that we have of meetest.

Here we lay down for the rarest

Doers whose sun's rise flectest

And in homes of air test.

Pauked with the tracst and sweetest.

Days with here-bearted, hold advances;

Nights in dire and shadowy, swift retreat

Rains that rush with bright, embattled lances;

Thunder, booming round your stirless feet

Winds that set the orchard with sweet fancles

All abloom, or ripple the ripening wheat;

Moonlight, starlight, on your mute graves falling;

Dest of drouth in drifts and layers crawling;

Lulling dreams of softly whispering snow;

Happy birds, from leafy coverts calling:

These go on, yet none of these you know,

Hearing not our human voice

Speaking to you all in vain,

Nor the pealm of a land that rejoices,

Ringing from churches and cities and foundries, a mighty refrain!

But the sun and the birds, and the frost, and the breezes that blow

When tempests are striving and lightnings of heaven are spent,

With one consent

Male unto them

Who died for us eternal requiems

Who died for us eternal requiem.

Two hostile bullets in mid-al
Together shocked,
And swift were locked
Forever in a firm embrace.
Then let us men have so much grace
To take the bullets' place.
And learn that we are held
By laws that weld
Our hearts together!
As once we battled hand to hand
So hand in hand to day we stand,
Sworn to each other,
In storm and mist, or calm, translucent weather;
and Gettysburg's guns, with their death-giving
roar,
Echeed from ocean to ocean shall.

Foar.
Feheed from occan to occan, shall pour Quickering life to the nation's core;
Filling our minds again
With the spirit of those who wrought in the Field of the Flower of Men.
